

CITROEN SM INJECTION

1972 Citroen SM Injection

The Citroen SM is a luxury coupe that was produced by the French automaker Citroen from 1970 to 1975. The SM was a result of a collaboration between Citroen and Maserati, and the car was powered by a Maserati V6 engine. The SM was a technological marvel for its time, featuring a hydropneumatic self-leveling suspension system, as well as power steering and brakes.

The SM was first shown at the 1970 Geneva Motor Show and quickly garnered attention for its distinctive, futuristic design. Its fastback body was aerodynamically efficient, and its low-slung stance, combined with its advanced suspension system, provided exceptional handling and ride comfort.

The SM was also well-received for its luxurious interior, which was trimmed with high-quality materials and featured many advanced technological features, such as a temperature-controlled air conditioning system and an on-board computer. The car was also equipped with a cutting-edge, high-fidelity audio system, making it one of the most technologically advanced cars of its time.

Despite its many innovations, the SM was a commercial failure, with production totaling just over 12,000 units. This was largely due to its high price tag, which was well beyond the reach of most car buyers, as well as the global economic recession of the early 1970s.

Today, the Citroen SM is highly sought after by classic car enthusiasts and collectors, and its innovative design and technological advancements continue to make it one of the most unique and fascinating cars of its era.
